PASSAGE WITH ANSWER KEY

Who am I without them? Who am I [without] Marvel and DC? Who am I without the [people] surrounding me? Who am I without these movies [and] series?

Beginning with a line from Dead Poets [Society] spoken by Robin Williams' character John Keating: “No [matter] what anyone tells you, words and ideas can [change] the world.”

In the same way, the people [you] surround yourself with and the fictional characters you [grow] up with can also change you in beautiful [ways]

I'm not saying that the characters you see [in] shows and movies completely change you overnight after [you] start watching them. Rather, their influence gradually becomes [a] part of you over a period of time. [They] can amplify certain behaviours, introduce you to new [ways] of thinking, inspire you, and sometimes even encourage [you] to become a better person.

When you try [to] explain this idea to someone around you — [or] perhaps even to yourself while reading this — [they] might think that you're borderline becoming insane. But [maybe] that simply means they haven't yet understood or [noticed] this phenomenon.

Be it learning to show empathy, [like] Barry Allen from The Flash, trying to put [yourself] in another person's shoes and see things from [their] point of view, standing alone and saying, “I [can] do this all day,” learning from our mistakes [so] that we don't repeat them, understanding the art [of] redemption, realizing that no amount of money can [ever] buy a second of time, redefining ourselves, or [learning] to pick ourselves up every time we fall [—] all of these ideas can contribute to our [mentality] in ways much larger than we initially expect.

[And] it isn't only about fictional characters. We learn [countless] things from the people around us and from [the] stories we experience. Some of them may be [professional] some personal, and some as simple as basic [knowledge] Yet, all of them contribute to our attitudes, [behaviours] and the way we see the world, often [more] than we realize.

And who am I without [some] of the beautifully written quotes from movies and [by] some incredible writers?

“Why do we fall, sir? [So] that we can learn to pick ourselves up.” [-] Alfred Pennyworth

“Annihilating is easy. Razing things to [the] ground is easy. Trying to fix what's broken [is] hard. Hope is hard.” - Loki

“You will [have] bad times, but they will always wake you [up] to the good stuff you weren’t paying attention [to.”] - Sean Maguire

“There is a natural order [to] things. Things happen the way they do. We [may] not know why at the time, but there [must] always be a reason.” - Henry Allen

“When [a] miracle is actually happening, nobody recognizes it... and [once] it has already happened, there is no need [to] recognize it.” - Trivikram Srinivas

“It’s not how [well] you play that matters, but when you stop. [If] you lose after winning, the loss will be [remembered] But if you win after losing, that victory [will] be remembered in history, because history only remembers [how] you finished.” - Venky Atluri

These are just [a] few quotes that popped into my mind while [writing] this post. There are countless other beautifully written [lines] that can change the way we perceive the [world] and even the way we perceive ourselves.
Many [of] my friends think that Marvel, DC, and movies [are] simply entertainment, and that these are nothing more [than] fictional characters. To them, it's just a movie [or] a franchise. To me, it's years of memories, [excitement] laughter, heartbreak, and the characters I grew up [with] Yes, they are fictional. But the impact they [have] left on some of our lives never was.
